

WHAT IS A STRUCTURAL HOME WARRANTY?

Structural home warranties were designed to protect both builders and buyers from being legally and/or financially exposed to construction defect issues. This warranty coverage plays an important part in a builder's risk management plan.

WHY HAVE WARRANTY COVERAGE?

Structural warranty coverage provides protection from expensive repairs, liabilities, and/or legal fees in the event a major defect occurs in one of the homes you've built and sold. Coverage includes defects in the load-bearing portions of new homes such as framing members, floor joists, roof trusses, and the foundation system.

We know most builders believe structural defects will never happen to them, but even solidly built homes can have problems. Those problems might not manifest into a structural defect until many years after a homebuyer moves into one of your homes. Once a problem becomes apparent, it can be very costly to fix. In addition, if you are building without a warranty, you are responsible for defects that fall within a state's implied warranty period (which may be up to 10 years or longer).

Structural home warranties provide reassurance to your buyers about the structural integrity of their home. They also show that you construct a quality product and stand behind your work. This creates buyer confidence and results in a quicker sale and a more satisfied customer.
